The first lighted community Christmas tree, in New York 18 years ago, attracted great throngs in Madison Square park. Since that time thousands of other communities have adopted the outdoor Christmas lighting idea, until today the "tree of light" is found in all parts of the world.

Many Mokena homes will proclaim the yuletide with the aid of lighted outdoor displays this year. It is estimated that in the Chicago suburban area alone more than 5,000 homes will observe the colorful and charming custom of "lighting up for Christmas."

The gas line trench which is being laid thru Frankfort has been giving employment to over 200 men beginning to slacken up, 65 men being laid off last week. A long stretch of the trench caved in recently and it will require many men to dig it out by hand as the digging machine cannot be used. The cave in has not only meant a delay but an outlay of many thousands of dollars for repairs. The new line is a natural gas line extending from Texas to Chicago.

Tinley Park Legion Notes

The Post meeting held on Monday evening, Dec. 15th, was well attended. Whether this was due to the fact that Comrades Brandau, Carmichael and Campbell were serving refreshments or the rumor that our gallant Sergeant-at-arms would bring along the bugle and regale us with some of the old familiar army calls, we know not. However, the refreshments were greatly enjoyed by all in spite of the fact that Art Schoeneck failed to show up to sound the mess call.

Two candidates, Fred Stege, and Henry Kampe, whom Ed. Henke brought along, were welcomed into the Post membership and to them we would say: come often, make yourselves at home and be active legionnaires not merely members. Tinley Park Post now has 51 members but there's still room for more. A question vitally concerning every ex-service man is being widely discussed at present. Namely: shall the Government pay the veterans the bonus, which becomes due in 1945 now, or make them wait until its maturity? The Legion is taking a referendum on this question and our Post voted to go on record as favoring immediate payment, providing that the full face value be paid.

Will County Road Committees Decide Wolf Rd. Route Must Go Thru Cleveland Woodland

The much discussed Wolf road right of way thru the timberland on the Cleveland farm south of Mokena to the Lincoln highway, was finally and definitely settled Monday afternoon in the Will County Engineer's office in the courthouse in Joliet, when the matter of changing the location of the route to either the east or west of the straight route, was carefully gone over and the county bond issue committee pointed out if the straight route survey as approved by the state would be deviated from in any manner it would mean a new survey and another approval of the state highway department, which is not an absolute certainty. The bond issue committee pointed out the cost of construction of either the east or west routes would be greater than the straight way.

The final decision was brought about at the suggestion of Wm. Kampe, supervisor of Frankfort township. A resolution signed by Mr. Kampe and the five members of the Mokena Citizens Committee favoring the straight route from the Hickory Creek bridge south to Lincoln highway and asking the bond issue and the right of way committees to procure this right of way and to let a contract this winter, was presented at the meeting mentioned. Seeing a united support on the straight route forthcoming from Mokena, the matter was put to a vote and all the members and chairmen of the committees in session voted unanimously for the straight route and chairman Wm. North of the right of way committee was instructed by the bond issue committee to secure the needed dedication of right of way from C. H. Warning, Chas. Elsner and C. M. Cleveland. Mr. Cleveland has stated he will fight the routing of Wolf rd. thru his timber and if he refuses to dedicate the right of way as surveyed thru his woodland, condemnation proceedings will be instituted by the county.

Ed. Cowan Nominated President S. W. Chamber of Commerce; Two Factions Seek Control

The Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce of the Orland and Palos region has been having a stormy time since a factional fight broke out among the leaders of the association. In last week's issue a full account of the factional strife was given, also the story that the Cowan faction was to meet at the Palos Club house Wednesday night of this week to elect officers.

According to the story as given by Mr. Cowan the election held in Orland last week resulting in the election of Dr. W. R. Schussler as president of the Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce, was merely a coupe sprung for the purpose of getting Cowan out of control of the destinies of the association and, according to Mr. Cowan the whole proceeding was out of line with the laws of the organization which require that the officers be first nominated and after ten days the annual election can be held.

Well, disregarding all the fine hair splitting differences here is what has happened:

Wednesday night of this week the Cowan forces numbering 34 members met at the Palos club house and nominated the following officers for the Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce:

President, Edward Cowan, Palos. Vice-President, M. J. Flynn, Palos. Sec. Treas. Roy Loebe, Orland.

According to Mr. Cowan he will call for an election of these candidates within the next ten or fifteen days.

Mr. Cowan states that he does not recognize the Schussler or Orland Park faction in any shape, manner or form. The Orland faction have possession of the association's incorporation papers and charter. Both factions claim the title "Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce" and both are making the continuation of the Southwest highway and the extension of the Wolf road north in Cook County the main objects of their endeavors.

The public is watching with keen interest what the outcome of this scrap will be.

Christmas Exercises

CHRISTMAS AND THE CHURCH

With the coming of another holiday season let us not forget that Christmas is a product of the church. Nineteen hundred years after the origin of Christmas Day, folks are apt to confuse the spirit of the birth of the Christ Child with the coming of Santa Claus.

It is nice to receive presents and give them in return, but how selfish when we overlook the true meaning of Christmas in anticipation of Mother's new casserole, Dad's striped necktie, or Sonny's spankin' new sled with shiny runners!

Let us therefore keep alive the true spirit of Christmas by observing with all reverence, as well as happiness, that our parents and grandparents expressed on that day. This coming Sunday is Christmas Sunday. Let everyone attend church somewhere on that day.

Scores of men who are among the "Who's Who" in the affairs of national progress attended the banquet, but not one of them made a speech. Miller, former director of public works and buildings, and W. H. Rhodes, member of the state board of pardons and paroles, were the others.

Emmerson recently asking support for their bills to be presented to the Fifty-seventh general assembly when it meets next month. These bills include the woman's eight-hour bill, one day of rest in seven, old-age relief, prevailing rate of wage, and the so-called "Yellow Dog" contract bill.

The state commission on revision of election laws has been considering the proposition of shortening the time between the primary and general election dates. Other suggestions being considered are centralizing elections by having but one each year, using a card index system for registration and elimination of the posted instruction ballot.

This committee is holding meetings in different wards, at which local residents are urged to have repairs and other miscellaneous work done now while it is easy to secure help and prices of material are low.

A new book has just come from the press, written by James B. Searcy of Springfield, after 31 years of general practice in the courts of all jurisdictions in Illinois and many years employment as assistant attorney general during which service he had occasion to supervise more than 240 cases before the Supreme court, and several in the Appellate court. The book has created more favorable comment among judges and attorneys of Illinois than any book recently printed pertaining to the subject, which is "Original Motions and Pleadings in the Supreme and Appellate Courts of Illinois from their Organization, with Forms." The author has so arranged the book that the gist of each several motion and pleading is perceived at a glance. More than one hundred forms are given, and the index makes reference to all the contents a quick process.

The new prison at Stateville has just installed the first fruit and vegetable dehydration plant in the Middle West. This is in line with Gov. Louis L. Emmerson's policy of efficiency and economy in running the affairs of the state. It is anticipated that the state will save thousands of dollars to the taxpayers by preserving the excess fruits and vegetables raised in the state vegetable and fruit gardens. It is said this process eliminates 90 per cent of the weight of fruits and vegetables, without destroying the flavor or hardening the cells, and cuts storage requirement 60 per cent. Inmates of state institutions are given employment in raising large quantities of vegetables and fruits, and the excess can be saved for use at the time when the gardens are not producing.

CHRISTMAS DAY in OTHER LANDS by Louise Hastings

COME, Hedwig," called her mother. "It is time to light the candle!"

"Why do we light it, Mother?" asked five-year-old Hedwig, as her mother proceeded to light it and pass it to her daughter.

"Put it right here in the window, and then I will tell you a story," replied her mother.

Hedwig climbed into her mother's lap and the story began: "This is a legend that people have loved for many, many years. It is thought that on Christmas eve the Christ Child returns to earth in search of kind and deserving people. He wanders over hill and dale, from castle to hut. And people who think of this beautiful legend still do as they did in other days. They place lighted candles in their windows that he may see the way and not stumble and fall. Sometimes he does not find people who will open their hearts and doors for him; sometimes he finds the way dark and full of pitfalls; but on and on he goes searching for loving people. So every Christmas eve we place our lighted candle in our window so that if he comes this way he will not find it dark."

"I am glad we have a candle burning," said Hedwig. "Perhaps it will light the way for others, too. Do all little Austrian girls and boys light their candles on Christmas eve?"

"Yes," answered her mother, "and they do it in other parts of the world, too."

It was a beautiful, warm day and Jacko was getting ready for his Hedwig of Austria.

Christmas celebration. "There go the bells, Mother," he called. "Shall I go now and meet the other children who will be in the parade?"

"No, child," his mother answered. "First we must go to the service. That is more important than the floral procession."

Jacko took his mother's hand and together they went to the church. He always loved that, and today, because it was Christmas, the service would be more beautiful than ever.

After this early service was over, Jacko's mother said, "Now you may join the children who are to parade the street, my child. Do you hear the music?"

Did he hear the music? He certainly did! It was a real band at the head of the procession, and Jacko couldn't get into line quick enough.

"How beautiful the flowers are!" he thought to himself as the procession of children and flowers and music began its march through the streets, "and how happy everybody looks!"

The afternoon was devoted to feasting and games and many kinds of enjoyment, but to Jacko the best part of the Christmas day was the floral parade, and for weeks and weeks he lived over again his marching with the other children, and he could hear the wonderful echo of the band long after the Christmas day and its celebration had passed.

"Father," asked little Marie, "when will Pere Noel come? May I sit up and greet him?"

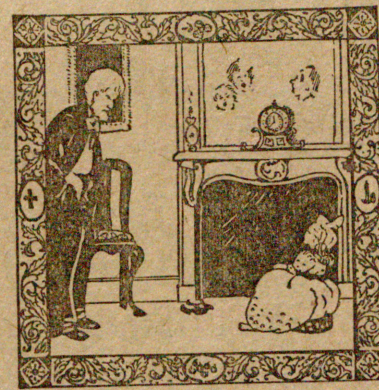

"No, no, child. No little folks must greet Pere Noel," replied her father. "Go over by the great log and keep very quiet. If you are good this Christmas eve Pere Noel will send down sugar plums in the night."

"When shall I put my shoes beside the Yule log, Father? Is it time now?" asked little Marie, who was impatient to have her part of the evening's festivities begin.

"Put your shoes by the great log when you go to bed, but keep very quiet now and listen to the older people sing their carols. Here come the minstrels to join with us," answered her father as he patted her on the head and smiled into her upturned eyes.

Keeping as quiet as her excited little heart would allow her, Marie watched the burning of the huge oak log and wondered many things. All around her was merriment and song, but she wanted the sugar plums that

Pere Noel would bring if she were good, so she kept as silent as it was possible. But she wasn't silent inside, not a bit of it! She was just about bubbling over with joy and happiness, and all of the time she was thinking of the sugar plums which she hoped to find in her shoes, and the Christmas gifts which she would receive on the morrow and again on the New Year's day. Oh, it was a wonderful night, and she was glad that she belonged right there with her dear father and mother and the songs and the Yule log!

"Mother," said Florian, "isn't it nearly time to start for the cathedral?"

"Not yet," she replied. "You must be patient a while longer. Come and help me give little sister her supper. Just as soon as the sun sets you will hear the cannons boom forth and the Holy Season will begin. Soon after that we shall start because we want to get a good place in the cathedral tonight."

It was hard for Florian to wait. This was the first time he had been allowed to go to the church services on Holy Night. Always he had seen the others go to this most important church event, but he had had to remain at home. Now the time had come for him to enter into the ceremonies, and he could hardly wait to start.

To the children living in Rome this Holy Night service is the most wonderful one of all. There is the beautiful church music to be heard, and the whole service is very magnificent. Florian's heart beat fast as he thought of all he was going to see and hear.

Hark! What was that noise? The cannons were booming! "Shall we go now, Mother?" he asked.

"Yes, Florian," she replied, taking him by the hand tenderly. "We will join the crowds on their way to the great cathedral and have a part in the great service." And little Florian was so happy he could hardly speak. (©, 1930, Western Newspaper Union.)

Ford Shows Faith in Future by World Wide Construction Program

Top—The Ford plant at Edgewater, N. J., opposite New York City. Center—The new plant at Long Beach, Cal. Bottom—A model of the plant being built at Dagenham, England.

THE Ford Motor Company's faith in the future of business, and especially in the future of the automobile, is evidenced by the fact that it is spending more than $60,000,000 for new plants and improvements in the United States and in foreign branches and associated companies.

The company has nine new plants under way throughout the world, while plans are being formulated for several others not yet announced. Wherever possible the new plants are being erected on sites accessible to both rail and water transportation so that, with each form of transportation supplementing the other, substantial savings will be effected.

Five of the new plants are in the United States, as follows:

Long Beach, California—This plant, recently completed to serve Southern California, has a capacity of 400 cars a day. Operating at capacity it employs 2,600 men.

Edgewater, New Jersey—The Edgewater plant, one of the company's largest assembly branches, has just been completed to serve New York City and surrounding territory. It has a capacity of 600 cars a day and employs 6,000 men.

Richmond, California—Work was started recently on a plant at Richmond, to be completed next year. It will have a capacity of 400 cars a day and will employ 2,400 men. It will supply cars to the San Francisco area.

Buffalo, New York—This plant will have a capacity of 400 cars a day and will employ 2,500 men.

Seattle, Washington—A site has been acquired and plans for a plant are being drawn.

A new manufacturing plant being erected at Dagenham, England, eighteen miles from London, to supplant the present works at Manchester, will be completed next year. It will be the largest automobile factory in the world outside the United States. Its capacity will be 200,000 cars a year.

An assembly and manufacturing plant is being built at Cologne, an assembly plant at Antwerp, and a service plant at Stockholm. Two branches—one at Perth, Australia, and one at Port Elizabeth, South Africa—were completed.

In addition the Ford Motor Company is spending several million dollars to increase the power capacity of the Rouge plant at Dearborn, Mich., and several million more in miscellaneous improvements.

HALF-WAY MEASURES

January 4, the Midlothian school will be dedicated. It is devoutly hoped that the ground will be frozen so the visitors will be able to get to the building. By spring the children can get in the back way—from Springfield avenue.

The village board is willing to pay half the cost of improving the street, on the supposition that the school board will be willing to pay the other half.

Doubtless Robbins and Posen will be anxious to have their streets improved in the same manner, but we are dubious as to how Midlothian people will take this suggestion.

However, we feel sure that the board is really waiting for Uncle Cesey to get his horse-car to operate. Put even this may fail, as the difficulties of getting a franchise may tie up the project for years.

POSEN POISON TO PORKER

Chevrolet coupe and Martin Mazair-ka lying on Jasinski's barn roof.

The Master Mind was packed into an ash container whence he made funny faces at the pig; and at intervals called out, "Taras swieuka, poch do ocha", which is not swearing, but means, "Nice little piggy, come to papa". Everyone else had gone home or left Posen entirely. The second also, was the pigs.

There it would have ended had not Hohrek run out of peas and at the same time gone through a brain storm. He disappeared from the scene, to return shortly with a mouse trap and a bag of corn.

With his heart between his teeth,
he entered the yard, tied the traps to a post, sprinkled corn about it and re-climbed his telephone pole before the pig could say "oink, oink".

The latter oozed toward the corn and ogled the trap. In a moment the air was clamorous with "oinks" and the yard shook with squirms—the pig had been caught in the trap.

Axe in hand Jasinski clambered from the ash can. He struck the pig five rapid blows on the head and whistled "Hail, to the Chief". The pig lost the third quarter.

There was feasting in Posen that night at Layewski's home where Jasinski and his eleven butchers were invited to a pork dinner.

And in the course of the meal
Ed. Dailey turned to Bruno Hohrek, humble admiration and questioning wonder in his eye.

"How do you figure a mouse trap would hold so big a hog?" he asked.

"Maybe it was the maczyspszk and the corn", responded Hohrek.

"What do you mean 'maczyspszk-ck'", inquired Dailey, mixing some of the consonants as anybody named Dailey would.

"Rat poison", said Hohrek, reaching for the beef stew.

Wallace Beery in Sailor Role at Lyric

Moviegoers who see the swarthy complexion and bull-like physique of Wallace Beery as he appears in his villainous roles on the screen would probably be amazed to know what this actor is like in real life. In his latest vehicle, "Way for a Sailor", opening to-night at the Lyric theatre, in which he plays in support of John G. Gilbert, Beery is seen as a beef eating, gin-swilling longshoreman. As a matter of fact, Beery is a strict vegetarian and has never taken a drink in his life.

Not that he is a prohibitionist.
His aversion to drinking is the result of his early experience with a circuit in which he had constant examples of the liquor habit before his eyes. These men lived short lives, he once told a friend, and Beery thought that he'd rather live on and see the world.

He learned plenty of other things from his life under the big top, chief of which was how to take hard knocks with a grin. But it was a blow to his parents, Noah and Margaret Beery, that he ran away from his home town, Kansas City, Mo., at the age of 16, so that he could travel with the elephants of Ringling's Circus.

HOPES TO FLY 400 MILES IN AN HOUR!

Lieut. Al Williams, famous Navy speed seaplane titleholder, in the cockpit of the new middlewing monoplane "Mercury" racer now undergoing tests at Annapolis, Md. It has a wing spread of 26½ ft., weighs 4,400 lbs., and carries a 24 cylinder motor. If found to develop sufficient speed it will be piloted by Lieut. Williams in the International races at Cowes Isle of Wight, England. According to the designers and builders of this plane it will attain a speed of 400 miles an hour. So far as is known this would make it the speediest thing ever built by man. Nothing in the air, on land, on or beneath the sea has so far ever been known to travel at such a speed. It is with this speedy craft that the Navy hopes to take the forthcoming Snyder Cup races in which will be entered the speediest machines and the best known air pilots of the world. The man who will pilot this flying craft, is Lieut. Williams, who is the holder of many world speed records. (Herbert Photos).

Dividend
Printing

There is one kind of printing that you want—printing that pays a dividend on the investment.

A letterhead with right sort of type properly balanced is a real business asset. It wins the approval of the person receiving your letter, and while he is in this frame of mind your letter is read.

The same reasoning applies to any other job of printing. Neatness, the right weight and kind of paper, the color of the ink, the selection of the type, all play an important part in the production of dividend printing.

We are equipped to give you that kind of printing. Let us prove it to you.

School to Be Dedicated on January 4

The Midlothian school will be dedicated Sunday, January 4, if arrangements can be completed in time by the Midlothian Lions club, which is sponsoring the program. Full details will be given in next week's issue.

Monday evening the Midlothian (short for Midlothian Lions) listened to a report from Ralph Woerheide on a building code. His report was accepted and now goes to a joint meeting with the village board and the committee from the East End Development association. The meeting will be held sometime this week.

If the code proposed by the Lions is accepted, a considerable higher standard will be set for local building. Among other things, dwellings cannot be built on posts and permanent chimneys (with flues) must be constructed.

A donation of $25 was ordered sent to the Midlothian Relief association.

made by Lion members to any individual or organization until the request had been passed upon by a Lions committee. It was suggested that unless this were done it would soon be necessary to hold a bunco for the relief of the harassed merchants.

Lion Reimer brought his music box, so the social part of the program was a decided success.

The next meeting of the Lions will be at the Hotel Hayes, Chicago, where a Charter night program will be held. Reservations should be made at once through treasurer, Clarence Mills of the Royal Blue.

LION NEWS

By N. H. Fetter, Correspondent.
Yes sir, these special meetings sure seem to drag the boys away from their firesides, Sunday afternoon slumbers or what ever the case may be. However, several of the Lions attended a meeting at the Woerheide office Sunday afternoon. Those present were: Moore and Moore, Woerheide and Woerheide, Cumming, Mills, Grill, Stolz, Nagle, Searle, Van Merton and yours truly.

We all miss our fellow friend and Lion, Stuart who has been confined to his home for several days. The Lions and Lionesses wish you a speedy recovery Stuart. Keep up the good old spirit.

Are we ready for that charter night banquet on the 29th? I'll say we are. A lot of the boys are going to diet until then. And don't forget you Lions we want 100 per cent attendance at that banquet. Special Notice—Bring your Lionesses along. The four horsemen gathered at a banquet given by Cook County Lions last week at the Stevens restaurant. These meetings are held on the second Tuesday of each month at 6:30 p. m. and we want a bigger and better turnout for Midlothian at next meeting, so don't forget the date.

Those attending the next meeting were Lions Searle, Grill, Cumming and Fetter.

They are still talking about that old time dance and every one wants to know when the Lions are to have another. Maybe soon, who knows? Let's have a little comment on it, good or bad. We'd like to hear it and how.

CHEVROLET CHRONICLES

Chief Gunner's Mate Thomas Eadie, master diver of the U. S. Navy and wearer of the Medal of Honor personally bestowed upon him by President Coolidge, is scheduled to be heard in the tenth of the "Chevrolet Chronicles" over stations as shown above.

Chief Eadie, who also was twice decorated with the Naval Cross, leaped into headlines throughout the nation for the "display of extraordinary heroism in the line of his profession above and beyond the call of duty on December 18, 1927, during the diving operations in connection with the sinking of the U. S. S. S-4 with all on board as a result of a collision off Provincetown, Mass. On this occasion, when Michels, C. T. M., U. S. Navy, while attempting to connect an air line to the sub-marine at a depth of 102 feet, became seriously fouled, Eadie, under the most adverse diving conditions, deliberately, knowingly and willingly took his own life in his hands by promptly descending to the rescue in response to the desperate need of his companion diver. After two hours of extremely dangerous and heartbreaking work by his cool, calculating and skillful labors, he succeeded in his mission and brought Michels safely to the surface."

Another thrilling episode which Chief Eadie is to relate for the air audience concerned his work on the submarine S-51, which sank with a loss of 33 lives in 154 feet of water. In his work of trying to burrow under the submarine to get chains beneath it for elevating to the surface, mud clogged the exhaust valve of his diver's suit, and air pumped down to him from the rescue tug inflated the suit like a toy balloon, until it exploded with him under the water.

Bremen Township Health Topics

Eleanor Gallagher, R. N.
Rural Nursing Service of Cook Co.

We all realize that food, fuel and clothing are necessary factors in preserving health, so we do not think that a discussion of these things under the health topics will be out of place. We all should feel very proud to know that Midlothian has come to the front and organized a relief association which is in line with the recommendations of the governor's commission.

This relief is already functioning a hundred percent in spite of some opposition and much misunderstanding. The village of Crestwood with its very active Woman's Club was the first to see the advantage of this move and joined their resources with the Midlothian groups.

We all know the reason for such widespread need is "unemployment", and the only lasting remedy is employment. We believe the one thought uppermost in the minds of thinking persons should be to find employment for the unemployed.

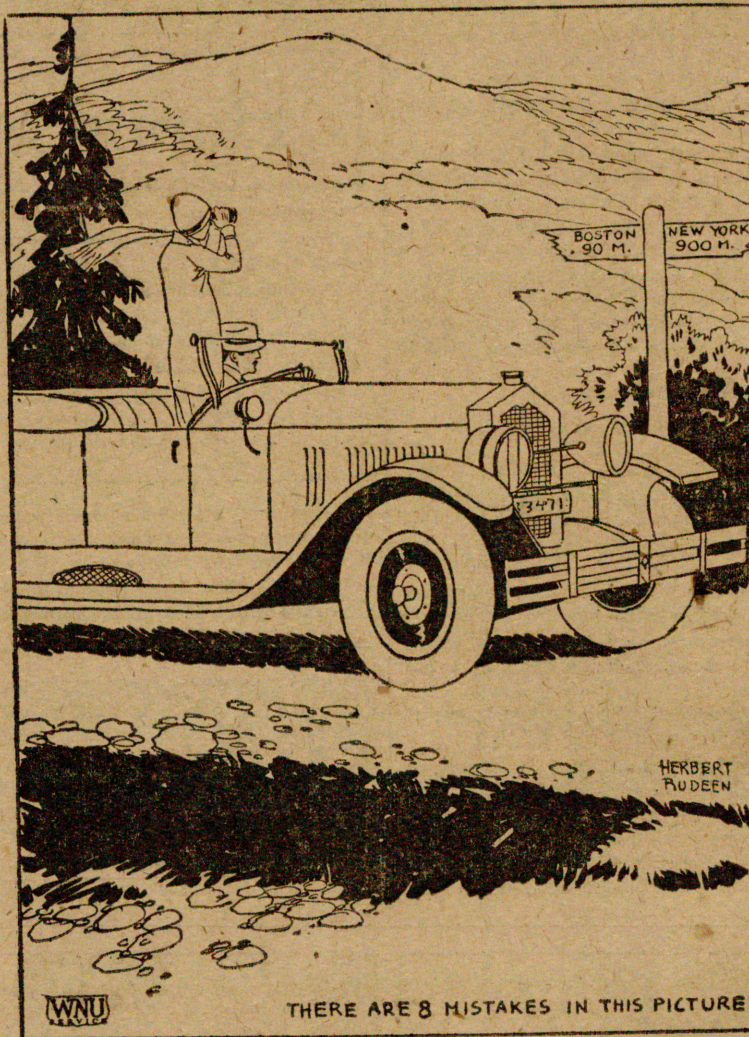

Just as a suggestion for people to turn over in their minds, may we recommend that each family who have a pay check coming in regularly furnish a days work at their own home for a man or woman who is unemployed and pay them the usual wage for such service.

This would furnish them funds for the week's groceries and put them on a self-supporting basis. It is the opinion of our leading welfare workers that the best method of rehabilitation is to help people to help themselves, and this is what you are doing when you furnish a day's work for a man or woman who is unemployed.

A. A. Terry our local police officer is furnishing small jobs of work for the unemployed men from families aided by the Relief association and in exchange for the services rendered he gives them an order on one of the stores that furnishes credit to the Relief, thus removing the need of their taking free aid.

The Mud of Midlothian

They've been talking about it for ages but it didn't happen till last Saturday night. The lion lay down with the lamb when Conservatives and members of The Goodfellowship Club mixed together at the Welfare Relief bunco and no battle was done.

But looking over Messrs. Burns, Healy, Sidell, Entrop, Watson and Thebow its difficult, let us say impossible, to pick out the lamb.

And feeling particularly courageous at the present moment, we dare to say that some of the ladies don't look so very much like lambs, either.

But on the other hand, there are times when they can make the men look rather sheepish.

And don't you think that crack is rather wooly?

But wooliest crack of all is Entrop's slogan for Kreis Bros., We present it herewith.

Censored. Ask Entrop

WHO'S WHO

If you have tears prepare to shed them now. Our subject this week, Chief Swanson, is another of those fellows who has had a tough break all his life—he was born in Idaho and he lives in Markham. But Idaho can brag at least about its potatoes. Markham—oh well, what's the use; draw your own conclusions. Then, again, Markham is next to Midlothian; that's something to talk about.

And who said "Not to brag about?"

Swanson used to chase cows; now he chases autos. There isn't a bit of difference. The cows couldn't do anything about it; neither can the drivers.

One thing about Paul Swanson is unusual. He's the only man, between the north pole and the antarctic regions down near Tinley Park, named Swanson who isn't also called Swede. Which proves that he either doesn't look Swedish or he does look tough.

Quite a hunter is our subject, a veritable nimrod we would say if we wished to appear learned. He shot a wolf over in Markham once which is quite possible, knowing what Markham is like. And it may be true since it happened before Ben Schroeder lost his police dog and a local druggist his greyish blue Angora cat.

But Uncle Casey wishes solemnly to warn his readers: Keep your pets indoors during the hunting season for even a canary can be called a baldheaded eagle.

Bill Bihlmayer was about as much damaged when he fell off the light cord in the postoffice as if he had played the Posen cyclones.

And since both names have been mentioned we might as well tell this story: But Uncle Casey does not guarantee its authenticity or humor. And if anything happens to him he does not want Paul Swanson to go around saying he has shot a lion or an elk or a moose.

To get back to the story, Bill Bihlmayer when he was a popular young restaurateur (oof) served a rare, a very rare steak to Paul Swanson.

"Didn't I say I wanted it well done?" asked the officer. (Don't skip this is a new one—on me)

"Well, it is kind of rare", said Bill. "Rare", said the chief; "I've seen cows hurt worse than that and they got well."

LION GUMBO

Lion Mason built himself a nice new coal box in back of the Uptown and after putting on a nice strong padlock on the cover he was thinking of cutting a hole on the side so that it would be easier to get the coal out—

We believe the Rajah needs more sleep. He also bored plenty of holes in the box so the coal wouldn't die—so long till next week Lion Mason.

All those who wish to donate any thing towards the purchase of a new goboon for Lion Ben Schroeder, please get in touch with Fetters the Fixer.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER
TRUMBULL

The movies have long been taking stars from the stage. Now the stage is taking stars from the movies. It really is very simple. Theatrical producers said to themselves:

"Why not make the movies help rather than hurt our business? The movies have spent huge fortunes making the pictures of certain persons known in every city, town and hamlet. Naturally, the country in general would like to see these stars in person; see them check in at the hotel; stroll along the street; take a curtain call; come out the stage door. For that it one thing about a moving picture: the stars are not home-grown; they are canned goods, and you can't meet them at the stage door after the show. So let's play the human element. There should be money in it."

So saying, the theatrical producers proceeded to make the road to Hollywood a two-way street. I suppose they talked to the movie stars of the thrill of appearing before an audience which paid to get in, rather than an audience of camera men, who were paid to be there; of the sweet sound of applause; of flowers handed over the footlights. Anyhow, there are a number of moving picture performers who are trying their hands at becoming actors and actresses.

There is a big difference in the two games. There are no retakes on the stage. There is no retouching. There is a prompter, but no director with a megaphone. And the perfect thing must be done night after night, not caught just once under prepared conditions, as it is in the movies. Nor is throwing the voice to the back of a theater the same thing as talking for a megaphone. Stage tricks are not the same as movie tricks, and they take longer to learn.

Although Harlemites are inveterate gamblers, there has never, so far as I can discover, been a roulette wheel there. The game of policy, now known as "numbers," is the most popular form of gambling and next to that comes dice shooting. The police don't bother much about the card clubs, but they will not let a dice house get started, if they can help it. The reason is that it draws all the crooked, element, colored and white, and there are too many stabbings, cuttings and shootings. I am told that there is only one dice house in Harlem and that it probably will be closed at any moment. Crap games in private apartments, between friends, or supposed friends, always go on.

Those persons who find boxing bouts dull affairs, as many of them are, should try a new system. They should go to the smaller clubs, and, instead of looking, listen. Here top price for seats is never more than three dollars and everything is on an intimate footing. At the big baseball parks the seats close to the ring are occupied by bankers, brokers, stars of finance and the stage, and the sort of persons who take their public amusements in a more or less dignified manner. The rough wit, who has money only for a cheaper seat, is too far from the playing field to make his voice heard, and the very size of the park and crowd make him feel his own insignificance, cramp his style and give him an inferiority complex; which is one of the things that is the matter with baseball. Perhaps the remark of the fight club gallery god that has been most often repeated was the one made when a yellow-haired boy was back-pedaling desperately, but not fast enough to escape a beating.

"Hey, blondy," yelled a galleryite, "you're wanted on the telephone."

Dr. Frederick W. Hodge tells me that he believes the oldest apple trees in the United States are to be found in the Manzano region of New Mexico. They were planted by Spanish monks about 1656. In the wooded portions of Ohio, wild apple trees still are to be found, planted by the man known as "Appleseed Johnny." The story is that he used to wander around eating apples and carrying a cane. When he finished an apple, he bored a hole in the ground with his cane and planted the seeds. I might try that in Central park.

Love at First Sight

"I LOVED YOU THE FIRST TIME I SAW YOUR FATHER'S FINANCIAL RATING"

Plan Statue for Alaskan Heroine

Seattle.—Loved by the hardy Alaskan prospectors and gamblers as one woman who remained "pure and white as the snow" during the gold rush days of '97 and '98, Mollie Bell will live again when her friends erect a bronze statue of her at Skagway, Alaska.

The laughing-eyed Irish lass, honored by all on the trail and in camp, was the belle of the North. She was a comrade and tender-hearted pal to the unkempt men who plunged into the wilderness to seek their fortunes.

One of her closest friends was "Packer Jack" Newman, who wooed and lost her. He has had a bronze image of the famed Alaska belle molded for a pedestal to be placed in a Skagway park dedicated to her memory.

Far different than the dance-hall girls, Mollie Bell was the angel of the camps, and her name is still spoken in hushed reverence by the old-timers. It was she who cared for the sick and friendless, who grubstaked prospectors, who lent a helping hand wherever she could.

Mollie went North while she was in her early twenties and opened a grub shack near Lake Bennett. "Packer Jack" met her first when he stumbled into her tent one night suffering from a frozen hand. She administered aid to him as she had to others, and a romance began.

"Packer Jack" became a bit too sure of himself, however, and when Mike Bartlett began showering attention on Mollie, Pack ordered her to forbid Bartlett entrance to her grub tent. Mollie married Bartlett.

Mollie gradually drifted away from her direct contact with the trail, and in 1902 she was living in Seattle with her husband. Her brief life ended in October of that year when she was shot and killed. Bartlett was acquitted of her murder when adjudged temporarily insane.

Now Mollie's going back to Alaska to take her rightful place on the Skagway trail, a perpetual reminder that there was at least one girl of the trails who was not a "dance-hall Lou."

IMAGINATION

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

We are a tremendously practical people these days. We are avid for facts. We want to know when and where and why. We are not satisfied until we know the length and breadth of whatever we are concerned with. Exactness, truth, something that can be demonstrated, proved, measured, weighed, is what we require. Faith and imagination we take little stock in.

I knew an old woman years ago who gave me a new insight into the joys of life. She had been a helpless cripple for five years or so, and during that time had not been outside the walls of the little room in which she lay. She was blind, too, and could only dimly make out the figures who came and went in her room, and yet she was happy.

"How do you pass the long, tiresome hours?" I asked her once, for she was very much alone.

"I travel a good deal," she replied, "and of course there are always books to enjoy."

I knew that she had not been out of the room for years, and her eyes were so dim that it was only by my step and the sound of my voice that she recognized me.

"Tell me about your travels," I suggested.

"I go fast," she explained, "faster even than an airplane could take me. I have been in England this morning—down in Devon. I heard the birds singing and I saw the green fields. The roses were blooming and I caught the perfume of the lilacs. It is very beautiful in Devon, and I go there often and see again all the things that I knew so well and loved so much when I was a girl."

"And how about the books?" I asked.

"I read a great deal when I was young," she explained—"Dickens and Scott and Thackeray, and poetry, too, and now when time begins to drag I pick up one of these old friends and go over the story again and renew my acquaintance with my old friends. It is almost as good as actually being able to read. You see I play I am reading."

Imagination! It kept her busy; it kept her contented and happy.

The Bacons had lived in our town all their lives and practically all their friends were there. Now they were ten thousand miles away in a foreign world among entire strangers and with a strange job to be done. It was

Kansas City, Mo.—Twelve years ago he was a millionaire-minus, that is, he owed a million.

And today Emory J. Sweeney of this city is a schoolman, free of debt—and he intends to stay that way.

Making the million in real estate developments was difficult enough, but paying his debts of a million was even more difficult—so he has no desire for not easy, and sometimes Bacon's courage waned—he longed for the old friends, for the old scenes, for the help that comes from companionship. He came in one afternoon, from a long either experience again, he is certain.

Mr. Sweeney settled his debts by disposing of some of the luxuries which his fortune brought him. They included a huge mansion, a ten-story business building, a fleet of motor cars valued at $100,000, a huge real estate subdivision, and a radio station.

Today the man lives in a comfortable home and owns a three-story walk into the country, face radiant.

"Where have you been?" his wife asked him.

"I have been back home for a while," he said. "I have seen the campus and our old house and I have had a long talk with Watson, and I have shaken hands with a dozen of the old friends, and it has done me a world of good. I am not so homesick as I was."

She understood. It was only imagination. For the moment he had thrown off his present environment and had gone back to the old one, and he was recreated.

building where his school is conducted.

The good heart of Mr. Sweeney actually proved his undoing.

He was at the height of his prosperity at the end of the World war, when influenza swept the nation and snapped the backbone of his fortune.

"I took care of the sick boys, although I was only paid to teach them," Sweeney explains. "Influenza became the country's problem, and I made those boys my own problem. I bought and rented hospitals—and paid the bills out of my pocket."

The real estate business suddenly seemed stricken by illness, too, for Mr. Sweeney met trouble in that field also. Finally he counted his debts at the million mark, and then he began paying his obligations. The last settlement was made just a few days ago when he disposed of Indian Village, a pretentious land development from which he at once time expected to realize another fortune.

AFTER CHINESE LOAN

Judge Paul M. Lineberger, legal adviser to the Chinese Nationalist government, came to Washington as a special envoy of China to negotiate for a proposed loan of about $300,000 in silver. Plans for the loan specify that the money would not be used for military purposes, but rather in returning Chinese soldiers to the pursuits of peace.

CHAPTER X —16—

Will Has a Vision

The firm of Poole and Todd found itself at the end of two years established beyond question. It owed its success to Will's terrific efforts. He had met and overcome one after another of their natural foes: Mr. Poole's idleness and intemperance. By a kind of fierce affection he had dominated and controlled the old man and kept him working. The profits were divided, after he had his fifty a week, and Poole his hundred. And out of his share of the profits, Will repaid his partner for the loan for Ernestine's hospital bill. He repaid him the exact half of the amount Poole had sunk into the business at the beginning.

And after two years he found himself face to face with the one enemy he could not conquer. Ernestine noticed that he grew thin and pale, that fall that the baby, Elaine, was two. "What is it, Will?" she asked him. "I thought everything was fine now."

"It's Poole," said Will. "He's not drawing—he's boozing, but, of course, that's not new. Only—he's lost interest."

"What do you mean, Will?"

"He's falling—his health. His eyes are bad."

"You mean—he's old?"

"Yes," said Will. "That's what I mean. He can't help it—poor devil—he struggles against it—but it's showing on him."

"But, Will, what are you doing?"

"Why, I'm managing—but that's all. When I can get him to help, we work together. We've got the strip all planned out for another year, the general sequence of things. But I don't feel that I can do Poole's stuff. My own ideas would be different. I can do the drawings well enough—nobody would notice, probably—but—"

"You don't want to go on—without him?"

"The stuff is his, Ernestine. I don't want to—there's something fundamentally wrong—even when I'm his partner, and all. For a while, as a makeshift, I can go ahead, and take care of the mechanics of it, and do the conversation—but actually, we haven't any business at all. We only have him—and when he's gone—"

Will sighed, and then squared his shoulders.

"Well—here's hoping," he said, and grinned at her. "I guess the old boat will sail another season. You see—it's hard for me to crowd him, Ernestine. He is old, and his eyes are about gone, and he hangs on me—it's like making a sick old horse pull in the harness—for us. Of course, it's for him, too, but it is really for us. We are the ones that will enjoy the money—not him. I find myself soft with him."

"I know," she understood this exactly, and her young face was troubled. She was blooming again with beauty and vitality. She had been a lovely but now she was in flower—in her middle twenties—young with beauty and grace, but with poise now, too, and a strong sense of accomplishment. She had background now of a new kind—not the background of parents and school and a fine home, but the background of effort and self-control.

"I'll take Peter," she said. "You can look after Elaine."

She was going to Lillian's, to see mamma who was home from New York for another visit.

Will watched the family away, Elaine perched on his arm. Elaine was happy with her father, and they made a game of supper. Now, at two, she was beginning to be a bonny baby. They had had a long struggle with her. But at last her heart was beginning to beat a rhythmic tune—a healthy organ instead of an undeveloped heart in an undeveloped body. It almost seemed that they could breathe again.

After the little girl was sleeping Will sat beside her, smoking and watching her—dreaming those things a father dreams for his little daughter. The daylight was going, and the last of the light seemed to gather in an idleness about the baby's face. Suddenly Will was shot through with an emotion more powerful than anything he had ever felt. For just an instant the baby face seemed the only thing in the world—the lashes down in a smudge against her cheeks—he saw not flesh, but color—not bony structure, but pure line—idea—

He stared at her, and saw not the child but her picture. In that moment he sensed the true identity of her being, as one hears in astonishment clear tone and harmony where there is no sound. He was profoundly disturbed. Why, he could paint her—this was new—this feeling; he had not felt like this before, not even when he dined so constantly in colors as a child. He had never felt this; he could paint her; he knew that he could.

During the whole month of January Mr. Poole did not draw a line. He came to the office and sat there, but Will could not get him to work, and found himself incapable of much arguing.

Early in February he said to Will one day, "This is my birthday."

"It is?"

"Yes—I'm sixty-five—but I feel ninety-five. Will, I'm through."

"You're through?"

"Yes; I'll never draw another line. I can't work any more."

There was no questioning the sincerity of his tone. Will found himself accepting this statement as true. Mr. Poole was through. It would be idle to argue or to cajole him.

"Well," he said after a little, "this is the end of Poole and Todd, then."

"Yes," answered his partner heavily, "it's the end."

After a few minutes of silence, Will got up and began to pack away the drawing boards, to sort out pencils, rack up the stiff cardboard sketches and set the office in order.

"I'd like to go to Florida—where it's warm," said Poole dreamily. "I've been cold for months."

Will looked at him queerly. He felt sad. The old man was, in his own eyes, a failure. He did not feel, nor was he warmed by, the praise or the recognition of others. Long afterward Will felt that in that moment he had known the cold and clammy breath of death. The death of activity, of hope; the yielding of, some long-loved and never-forgotten dream.

"Let's have a party at Pastano's to-night. Mostane's in town—and McDermott would come. Do you think Ernestine would be my guest—at Pastano's?"

"I think so, John. She'd do most anything for you."

"Ernestine"—the old man seemed to wander—he paused a long time, and looked at Will with a faint shining of the old intelligence in his face. "Will, put those d-d pasteboards down and come here—I want to tell you something. It was Loring Hamilton that had you fired from the Sun. He had Wiston's affairs in his hands—they were thicker than anyone knew, and Wiston had reason to please Loring. Wiston got tight one night and told it. And lost his job for it. McDermott will be friendly to you, if you take any work to him."

"Don't worry about me, John."

"I'm not worrying, you young devil. I want to tell you, though, about Loring. Watch out for him. He's got power now, in a way. He's going to London next year for Pastano. He's the prince of the bootleggers now. Pastano is using him recklessly. He doesn't give a d-n for Loring—will probably ruin him in the end. But Pastano does care about you—and about Ernestine."

"What Loring does is nothing to me. Like most mean things, it worked out for the best. I mean—you can't do a dirty trick as easily as you think. I've come farther this way than if I had stayed on the Sun."

The old man left to go and make arrangements for his party, and Will, after a brief telephone conversation with Ernestine, pitched into the files. It was late afternoon when he went home and as he went he was turning over in his mind the possibilities for the future. His enthusiasm had gripped a new idea. Ernestine would not like this. But he could do well for himself. He could!

"After all," he said to himself, swinging along among the small tidy houses, "after all, I was in danger of becoming a copyist. I've learned all that Poole can teach me. It's time for me to work alone—to develop my own ideas."

Ernestine was dressing, and giving instructions to the neighbor girl who was to stay with the children.

"What do you think, Will? Shall I wear my red dress? I thought I would never go to Pastano's again. It's years, though, since we went, and I don't mind going a bit. Will, you aren't listening to me. I've been so vexed with Peter. He's had two whippings, and needed a third. He's getting too big for me to spank any more. I wish you'd take a little paddle to him."

Will stood in amazement in the middle of the bedroom, his tie in his hands, looking back at the bright reel of memory—himself and Ernestine walking on Clark street in a late snow —going into Pastano's. How his heart had burned that night at Loring and Lillian—at all of them stirring Ernestine against him. Why had he cared? He didn't care now. He was singularly unmoved by the pronouncement that Loring had forced Wiston's hand, and Wiston had seized the first excuse to dismiss him. He realized with a shock that his resentment against Loring had always been personal—from the time he had been a little boy dragging a brace, and Loring had been a big boy, strong and robust and always teasing Ernestine and pulling at her hair. It was because Loring had despised him—not because of Ernestine. It had been Loring's strength and hardness that he had hated, not Loring's attention to his wife. How strange to think that his jealousy had been for himself and not for her. His self-esteem had suffered, not his love.

He became conscious of Ernestine's voice, querulous with Peter who protested against being put to bed. Ernestine ought not take that annoyed, vexed tone with the boy. He realized that he had heard her speak so to Peter frequently, of late. If Peter were naughty he should be punished, not hector. Will took the boy from his mother.

"Go and get dressed," he said to her in a tone of command which astonished her. "You're always scolding the kid about something. Ever since Elaine came he's in trouble. You can't expect a healthy boy to go on tiptoe all his life because he has a sick sister. Go on and dress, and I'll take care of him. Be quiet, Peter, or I'll punish you. Not another word."

"He's just like you, and your family," Will told Ernestine. "He is willful and energetic and intelligent and strong. He wants his own way. Instead of dealing with him firmly you quarrel with him. You should not permit him the equality of an argument, and I want you to stop it, Ernestine."

Recollections of a dozen times when Will had been high-handed with her rushed over Ernestine.

"So you don't allow the Brice lands equality?" she asked in a cold rage, finding it difficult to take correction from him.

"It's just as well for us to understand one thing at a time without going into another," answered Will calmly. "If I think you are taking the wrong tone with Peter, I'll say so. It's my right."

They left the house and walked to the car line in silence. They sat beside each other in the car, they walked together into Pastano's, together in flesh, remote in spirit. The strong satisfaction of inner activity shone on Will's face, and it was like a declaration of war to Ernestine. Her anger grew until she could not remember when she had burned with such resentment.

She was excessively courteous to every one at the dinner party. John Poole told her of his plans for Florida, the end of his agreement with Will. Ernestine was astonished.

"Why didn't you tell me?" she demanded, turning to Will, and he answered her:

"We didn't have a chance to talk."

Ernestine felt that Pastano's was bad medicine for her. She was unhappy again.

At home, later, she spoke to Will somewhat timidly.

"Are we going to be enemies, Will? So many married people are foes—bitter, unforgiving. Lillian and Loring are in continual conflict. He must dominate her every move. He's the one to say where they will go, what they will eat, whether or not they will have children. I'm willing to accept what you said about Peter—only, let's keep our unity."

"You know I will never love anyone but you, Ernestine," he said impatiently, "but I've got a big job on my hands now. Don't be neurotic. I've got to swing this thing, and you mustn't be emotional if my mind is on my job instead of on sentimentalities. Anyhow, what are you talking about? Nothing's changed."

She was silent. As he sat on the edge of the bed smoking, she finally closed her eyes against his immobility, turned her head on her pillow and tried to sleep, but burning tears slid underneath the lids.

How Term "Thirty" Came to Symbolize Ending

Charles Payne Smith gave the following information in the Typographical Journal regarding the origin of "30" as used by newspaper men and telegraphers: "The first press association organized in Civil war times was composed largely of morning papers published near the eastern seaboard. Each paper sent into the central office items of local interest, which were then edited and telegraphed to all members. It happened that the first message sent to the association totaled 30 words and the signature of the sender, was placed at the bottom of the sheet by the operator. At that time piecework was the rule on all papers. The daily grist was usually set up, corrected and in the forms by 10 o'clock, but the compositors were compelled to wait around at their own expense until the foreman announced that '30' was in. So '30' became a byword among printers, symbolizing the end."

TIMOTHY: THE INFLUENCE OF HOME TRAINING

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:1-3; Philip. plans 2:19-22; II Timothy 1:1-6; 3:14-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Living for Christ in Our Homes. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Religious Training in the Home.

I. Timothy's Parentage (Acts 16:1).

His father was a Greek and his mother a believing Jewess. On his mother's side, at least, he had a godly ancestry. Frequently the influence of the mother makes the son. A pious mother and a pious grandmother were back of Timothy. How thankful to God ought those to be who have been blessed with a godly ancestry. Christian heredity and training are vital elements which go to make up Christian life.

II. Timothy's Training (I Tim. 1:5; II Tim. 3:14, 15).

His wise and faithful mother and grandmother carefully nurtured him in God's Word. He knew the Scriptures from childhood through their training. The faith which came to him through his grandmother and mother did not come through the laws of heredity, but through careful training and teaching.

Three factors were involved in his training:

1. Godly ancestors. Those who have been blessed with godly ancestors should thank God for them. Those who are to be the parents of the coming generation should see to it that their children are not handicapped by a wrong life and wrong teaching.

2. A Christian home. The young of the human race must remain for the longest period under the influence of their parents. Unending existence and exalted destiny demand long and careful training. The goodness and wisdom of God are vitally reflected in this provision for humanity.

3. A diligent study of the Holy Scriptures. Timothy not only was taught the Scriptures from childhood, but was commanded diligently to study them (ch. 2:15). No home training or hereditary influence can possibly take the place of personal study of the Bible.

III. Timothy's Call (Acts 16:2, 3).

While on his second missionary journey in company with Silas, Paul found Timothy at Lystra near Derbe. Perhaps he had been converted on Paul's first missionary journey, but hearing a favorable report of him by the brethren, Paul circumcised him so as not to offend the Jews, because his father was a Greek. This was in harmony with the decision of the Jerusalem council. It was a case where conciliation was possible without compromise of truth. From this time to the end of Paul's life, Timothy was his devoted companion.

IV. Timothy's Character.

1. Of a retiring disposition (II Tim. 1:6). He had received a gift from God at the hands of the apostle but it needed to be stirred up; that is, fanned into a flame. Such a temperament would mature in touch with a great personality like Paul. Each Christian has a gift from God's hand. It is highly important that the God-given gift be stirred up.

2. Courageous (II Tim. 2:1-8). Having been stirred up and freed from the spirit of fear, he deliberately identified himself with Paul in his sufferings and trials. Courage is greatly needed in doing the Lord's work.

3. Faithful (Phil. 2:20). Timothy tarried in the difficult field of Ephesus through many years. He was the only man of the proper fidelity to minister to the Philippians. The secret of his faithfulness in such a position was his fidelity to God's word.

V. Timothy's Ministry.

1. As a fellow missionary with Paul (Phil. 2:22). Paul testified that Timothy, as a son with a father, had served with him in the gospel.

2. As pastor of the church at Ephesus (I Tim. 1:3, 4). Here Timothy labored for many years, faithfully meeting the difficulties of that great church. The secret of his ministry, as that of all Christian ministers, was that he had implicit confidence in the Scriptures as God's Word, and that he diligently studied them so as rightly to divide them in meeting the needs of those to whom he ministered. This is the only way to meet the needs which arise in the difficult field of a pastor.

Humility

Humility is not only a virtue in itself, but a vessel to contain other virtues—like embers which keep the fire alive that is hidden under it. It empty itself by a modest estimation of its own worth, that Christ may fill it.—Thomas Adams.

The members of Rose Chapter Garden Club are all owners of poultry farms in the south sub-division of Elmore's Harlem avenue estates.

I hope to see you all at the American Legion Community hall, Saturday December 20, 1930.

Mrs. Edw. F. Towle, President.

The Royal Neighbors held their meeting Tuesday night of this week. It turned out to be a real Xmas party after our meeting was over. A comedy sketch was presented by Anna Clemmons and Anna Mesenbrink, two popular "small town married ladies" leaving their husbands, Marie Gotham acting as train caller. It was much enjoyed. Mrs. Elmer Gotham gave a reading on insurance, after which Leila Moss, Oracle, recited "Anna's and Willie's Prayer". And to be sure we must not forget the stories told by Lulu Rogers.

Each member brought a package to be turned over to the Legion for their Xmas charity baskets. The new officers follow: Oracle, Anna Mesenbrink. Past Oracle, Leila Moss. Vice-Oracle, Francis Ceithamel. Chancellor, Anna Clemmons. Recorder, Anna Hopman. Receiver, Minnie Rice. Marshall, Ethel Wannemacher. Ass't Marshall, Francis Rowden. Inner Sentinel, Anna Keheler. Outer Sentinel, Louise Goessel. Manager, Mrs. Freitag. Musician, Alice Anderson. Faith, Minnie Bettenhausen. Courage Stella Gotham. Modesty, Martha Dunn. Unselfishness, Berneta Wannemacher. Flag Bearer, Amelia Brennan. Juvenile Director, Frances Rowden. Captain of Degree Staff, Fie. Anderson.

A Juvenile Camp has been organized, the charter having 36 names on it. Installation to be January 27th. It was decided to have the members invite their families to this affair. A good time is expected. Esther Stockman is chairman.

The Green Garden Fire Insurance company will elect four directors of the Bremen township district for 3 year terms at the home of Wm. F. Koehler Saturday afternoon at 2 p. m. December 20th.

Right or Wrong Direction?

There is no use for us to ask anxiously if our power is increasing. There is no doubt of that. The only question is whether it is increasingly good or increasingly evil.—Amos R. Wells.

Accomplished Olives

ONE of the best products to eat all by themselves, canned olives are also an ever-ready help in making salads and canapés, and in garnishes and sauces. They are canned both green and ripe. The term green olives refers both to color and to the condition of the unripe fruit when pickled. If they are allowed to ripen on the tree, they turn the purplish black color which denotes the ripe olives.

Both varieties are used first of all as relishes. Second on their list of accomplishments comes their use as a flavoring ingredient for salads, for canapés and in sauces. When they are used as a relish they are often stuffed with pimientos, with almonds or with anchovies. These three varieties come already canned. But if you want to stuff your own with something else, you can do so with pate de foie gras, caviar, cheese or any other highly seasoned material.

A Fine Appetizer

One of the best ways to use olives as an appetizer is to wrap them with bacon, fasten it with toothpicks and broil them. So prepared they have every qualification which the best of canapés should possess. Ripe olives lend themselves to more different uses than green olives because they are milder in flavor and have a higher content of oil.

Stuffed green olives make a most attractive garnish, either whole or sliced.

The size of the fruit governs the price. Some of the ripe olives are known as "colossal" and are almost as big as plums.
